Internet Learning Grows Up

- Language learning website Babbel.com has been online for one year and continues to grow rapidly
- 180,000 users from more than 200 countries called to write birthday wishes to Babbel.com

Berlin, January 14, 2009 – Language learning website Babbel.com looks fondly back on its first year and receives birthday wishes from its members in their respective languages.

On the 15th of January 2008, Babbel.com went online for the first time. Now, after only a year, 180,000 people from all over the world are learning English, Spanish, French, Italian and German on the website. For the anniversary, they've been asked to write birthday wishes in the language they are currently learning. Then native speakers from from the Babbel community will go over these texts and give helpful feedback.

180,000 members from over 200 countries

Right now, Babbel community members come from 209 countries. From Afghanistan to Venezuela, practically the whole world is represented. Markus Witte, one of the founders and CEOs, says, “The quickly growing number of users and their positive feedback show us that we've really satisfied a demand. Online learning isn't just fun, it also offers clear advantages.”

Online language learning gets even more attractive

Babbel.com was formed a year ago with the idea of making language learning easier and more attractive using the possibilities of the the internet. With its playful teaching approach, the website also intended to reach users who may use conventional learning materials less. The interactive vocabulary packages and tutorials are intuitively designed. Pictures and pronunciation examples facilitate understanding and emphasize learning that sticks. Meanwhile, the community functions make it possible to study with others, whether it be with a learning partner or a “tandem” (language exchange). In the next months, alongside its free material, Babbel will begin to offer paid premium content.
